EVENT OVERVIEW

The global construction industry is undergoing profound transformation as digital technologies, artificial intelligence, automation, and industrialized building methods converge to address long-standing challenges of productivity, labour shortages, cost volatility, and sustainability. Across Europe and the Nordics, governments and industry leaders are actively accelerating the adoption of Modern Methods of Construction (MMC) — including modular, prefabricated, and AI-enabled solutions — to deliver housing, infrastructure, and urban development projects faster, smarter, and with lower environmental impact. In innovation-forward cities like Copenhagen, smart city initiatives, digital twins, AI-driven design, and factory-based construction are becoming integral to meeting ambitious housing targets and net-zero goals, with the European MMC market experiencing strong double-digit growth as public and private investment continues to rise.

Organisations pursuing this transformation face significant implementation challenges, including data silos, interoperability issues between onsite and offsite processes, cybersecurity risks, skills shortages, and the integration of new technologies with legacy systems. High upfront investment in factories and digital platforms, coupled with evolving regulatory frameworks and supply chain coordination, requires careful planning and cross-industry collaboration. Despite these hurdles, Modern Methods of Construction are delivering measurable results — reducing project timelines by 30–50%, cutting material waste by up to 30%, lowering construction costs through improved predictability, and decreasing building emissions through optimised design and sustainable offsite manufacturing. AI-powered tools further enhance these gains by enabling generative design, predictive analytics, automated safety monitoring, and real-time quality control.

Beyond operational improvements, the convergence of AI, digital platforms, and modular construction is creating substantial new business and investment opportunities across the entire value chain. Developers, contractors, manufacturers, and technology providers are exploring innovative revenue models, strategic partnerships, and data-driven services that redefine how the built environment is designed, delivered, and operated. As digital ecosystems and industrialized methods mature, the sector is shifting toward faster, more resilient, and sustainable project delivery. The Modern Methods of Construction, Copenhagen will bring together industry leaders, policymakers, developers, contractors, manufacturers, investors, and technology innovators to explore the strategic, technical, and commercial pathways required to successfully scale AI-enabled modular and prefabricated construction across Europe and the Nordics.

WHY YOU CANNOT MISS THIS EVENT

- Gain first-hand intelligence on how prefabrication and modular construction are transforming Europe's construction landscape, with a strong focus on Europe's policies, projects, and market realities
- Explore the latest advancements in modular systems, IBS, automation, digitalisation, and low-carbon construction that are shaping the next decade of off-site building
- Understand current and upcoming government initiatives, incentives, and regulatory frameworks for prefabrication
- Identify new revenue streams across smart infrastructure, modular construction, sustainable building and technology-enabled project delivery
- Understand how AI and smart technologies can support net-zero construction, resource optimisation and ESG reporting
- Explore compliance, cybersecurity, ethical AI and digital infrastructure standards shaping Europe's smart construction landscape

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

This event is targeted but not limited to:

- Project Management & Delivery
- Pre-construction
- EPC Projects & Contracts
- Operations & Asset Management
- Architecture & Design Innovation
- Civil & Structural Engineering
- Mechanical, Electrical & Plumbing (MEP)
- BIM & Digital Twins
- Generative & Computational Design
- Modular Construction
- Offsite Construction & Prefabrication
- Industrialised Building Systems
- AI & Digital Transformation
- Robotics & Automation
- Construction Technology
- Data Analytics & Predictive Modelling
- Smart Cities & Infrastructure

From the following industries:

- Construction
- Architecture & Design Firms
- Real Estate Developers
- Building Materials
- Design & Architecture Firms
- Affordable & Public Housing
- Healthcare & Education
- Infrastructure
- Financial Institutions & Investment Firms
- Government & Municipal Councils
- REITS
- Engineering Consulting Companies
- Energy & Utilities Companies
- Modular & Offsite Construction Firms
- Robotics & Automation Providers
- Technology Solution & Software Providers
